

Marissa Chavez

Marissa has worked for the last twenty years integrating policy, community organizing, advocacy and participatory research in her work. Her work has continually focused on integrating the voices of vulnerable communities into spaces where they have historically been marginalized. Her previous projects include working with NGOs on the U.S./Mexico border, working with families in immigrant communities and communities of color, and doing policy and research work focused on racial equity and social justice. Marissa started volunteering with Neighborhood House because of the strong commitment the organization has to serving our most vulnerable communities in King County.
